CHAPTER I

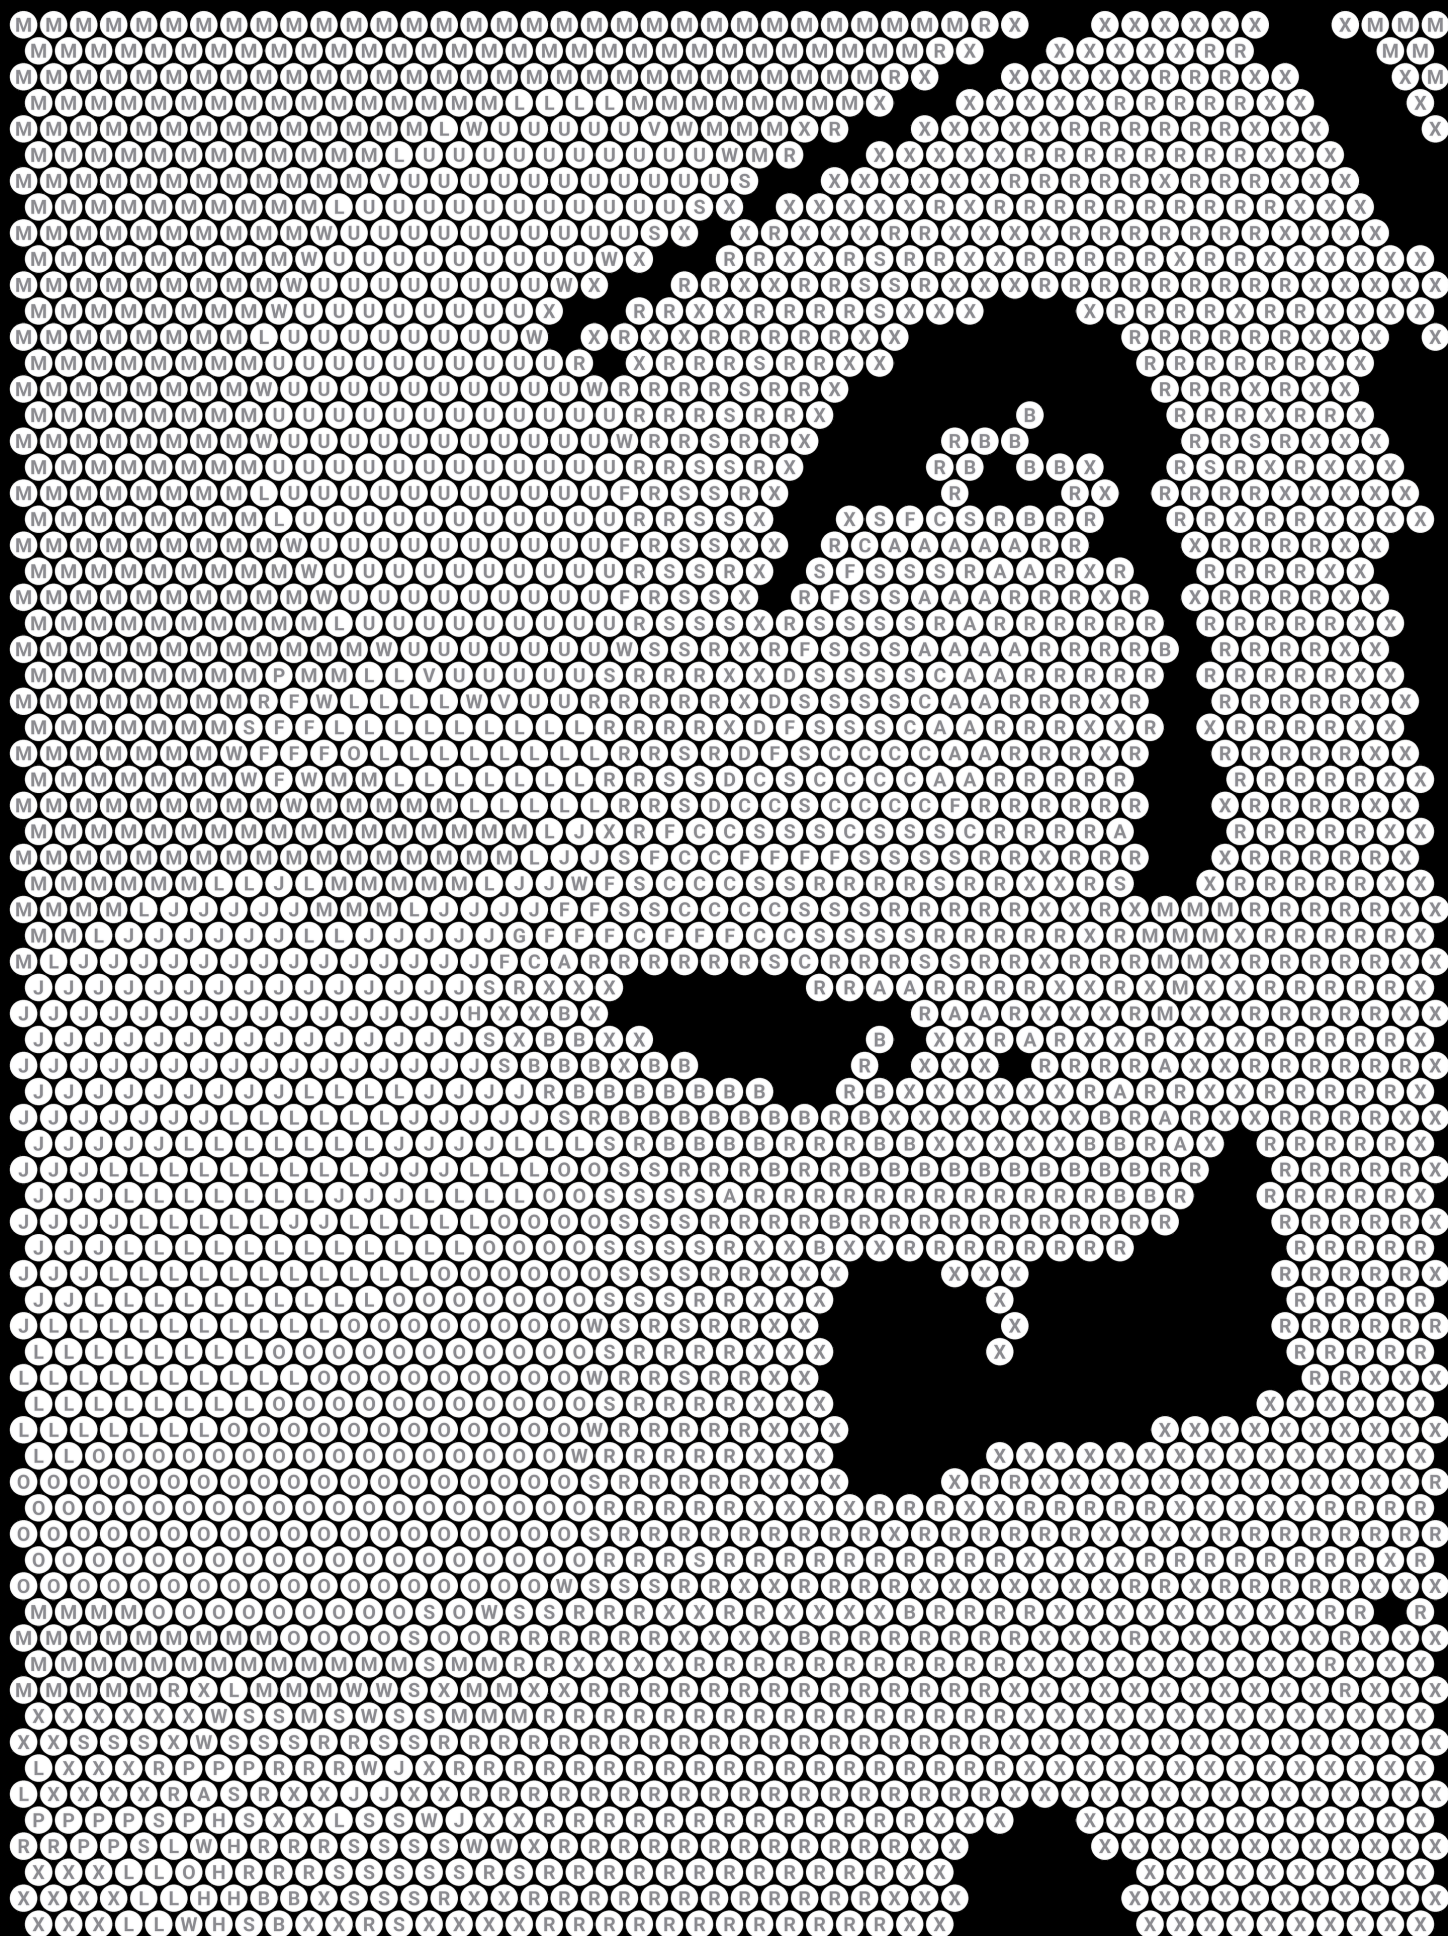

THE THIRTEENTH BELL

At midnight, Valdombra slept beneath an enormous moon.
The bell in the tower rang twelve times.
Then, when silence should have returned, it rang a thirteenth.
Kael smiled.
For generations, that bell had announced that a new knight had been chosen.

Kael left his home wearing his finest armor.
He had dreamed of this night for years.
There was no one in the square.
At its center, buried deep in the cobblestones, a black sword waited for him.
